NEW CHINAWARE

And Other Novel Things Seen in the Shops.

The newest Royal Worcester ware ommands attention. Borders of plain white china are separated by narrow thread-like bands of gold from solid colors of pink, of yellow or of dark blue. The shapes are unusually elegant and include special sets, such as eng sets—four cups, four spoons on a stand chaving a carrying handle) of Sheffield silver, the stand also having four indentations for the eggs; marmalade jars in Sheffield holders, with Sheffield silver spoon, and cracker jars also mounted with Sheffield silver. white china are separated by narrow also mounted with Sheffield silver.

One of the newest whims of fashion is the reproducing of all the favorite Colonial brass candlestick designs in mahogany, or in early English oak. These are truly elegant.

The finish is fine, and the slender and curved lines get a value in the wood that brass did not make possible. A brass cup fits into the candle socket

The latest telephone shelf has a rack in black for pencils and notepaper, a swinzing telephone-holder disk, hooks for holding the telephone books and a private black number list—all in a most compact form. It is of oak, finished in early English style.

The surpassing elegance of some of the latest diamond and platinum cuff-buttons calls for comment. The most buttons calls for comment. The most intricate lacy settings, so gem-enerusted that one marvels that human hands could produce them, are seen among these. Owing to the treatment of the platinum it resembles tiny gems, delicately faceted, where it is seen, and therefore its true character isn't recognized, the effect being of gems sione set in sleming those to form some lace.

Bar pins also have this invisibility of setting. One appeared to be diamonds so closely set that one touched the other the entire length of the pin. A su-perb treshwater pearl was seen in one I this description, as a central set, ing and two cabechon emerable, one on either and, finished its design.

There are several excellent tooth powders on the market, and chalk, variously "doctored," is the basis of some of them. It is admirable for the teeth. Persons who have trouble with softness of the teeth are often advised to wash the mouth out right and morning with milk of imagnesia. It is said to have a very good effect upon the teeth and washing the mouth with a weak solution of sait and water is also excellent. The breath may be sweetened and the teeth helped by washing the mouth two or three times a day in water to which has been added a table-mouth of linewater. HOLLOW OF HER HAND

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Harrying back to New York by motor, after having identified a body lying in a roadhouse as that of her husband. Mrs. Wrandall overtakes a woman whose appearance answers the description given of one who had accompanied her husband to the inn the preceding night, but, moved by a strange impulse, she helps the fleeling woman by taking her to her own rooms. Then she sends for her lawer, Mr. Carroll, and her bother in-law, Leslie Wrandall.

"You couldn't have gone on for ever, I tell you." "You couldn't have gone on for ever, my dear child, enduring the "She stopped him with a sharp exclamation "Why discuss it now" Let the past take care of itself. Mr. Carroll. Lesile Wrandail will take charge—Andershe when dealed with and a farce it is going to be?"

Half an hour later he departed, to rejoin her at 11 o'clock, when the reporters were to be expected. He was there, Lesile Wrandail called her up on the telephone. Hearing but one side of the rather prolonged conversation, he was filled with wonder at the tactful way in which she met and parried the inevitable questions and suggestions coming from her horror-struck brother-in-law. Without the slightest trace of offensiveness in her manner, she gave Lesile to understand that the home of his parents, to whom once more her husband belonged, and that she would abide by all arrange ments his family elected to make Mr. Carroll surmised from the trend of conversation that young Wrandail was about to leave for the scene of the window. He did not have to be told that Challis was the idol of the family, and that, so far as they were concerned, he could do no wrong:

After his departure. Mrs. Wrandail seenly opened the bedroom door and was surprised to find the girl wind, was surprised to find the girl wind, awake, resting on one elbow, her staring eyes fastened on the newspaperitat topped the pile on the chair.

Catching sight of Mrs. Wrandail she pointed to the paper with a remaining hand and cried out, in a voice full of norror:

The other crossed quickly to her side.

"Don't be alarmed. It was my lawyer. There is nothing to fear—at present. Yes, I left the papers there for you to see. You can see what a sensation it has caused. Challis Wrandall was one of the most widely-known men in New York. But I suppose you know that without my telling you."

The girl sank back with a groan. "My God, what have I done? What will come of it all?"

"My God, what have I done? What will come of it all?"

"I wish I could answer that question," said the other, taking the girls hand in hers. Both were trembling. After an instant's hesitation, she laid her other hand on the dark, dishevelled hair of the wild-eyed creature, who still continued to stare at the headlines. "I am quite sure they will not look for you here, or in my home."

"You are to go with me. I have thought it all over. It is the only way, come, I must ask you to pull your self together. Get up at once, and dress. Here are the things you are to wear." She indicated the orderly pile of garments with a wave of her hand. Slowly the girl crept out of bed, confused, bewildered, stunned.
